POTPOCALYPSE NOW?

WHILE COLORADO AND WASHINGTON LEGALIZE, CALIFORNIA'S MEDICAL-MARIJUANA INDUSTRY CRUMBLES

BY NICK SCHOU

California's medical-marijuana industry has taken an epic beating in the past few years. Despite signaling during his first campaign in 2008 that he wouldn't interfere in states that had legalized marijuana for medicinal purposes, President Barack Obama unleashed a major crackdown three years later. Starting in November 2011, federal prosecutors began authorizing raids on cultivation sites and dispensaries, while countless landlords were threatened with the seizure of their properties.

Publicly, Department of Justice (DOJ) officials such as Attorney General Eric Holder and U.S. Attorney Andre Birotte Jr., who supervises drug-enforcement efforts in Southern California, have repeatedly stated they aren't going after marijuana collectives that obey state law, but rather targeting only organized-crime syndicates. Yet internal department emails obtained by the Weekly suggest federal prosecutors are intent on eradicating all storefront dispensaries in California. In one email, for example, a DOJ official announces that while there are still some clubs open in Santa Ana, this "handful of stragglers" would be dealt with "soon enough."

Ironically—bizarrely might be a better word—while the feds now promise they won't interfere in Colorado and Washington states, which are busy legalizing recreational pot smoking, they are so intent on eradicating California's medical-marijuana industry they are threatening wheelchair-bound activists such as Marla James, the president of the Orange County chapter of Americans for Safe Access. On Aug. 7, DEA agents paid a visit to 17511 Griffin Lane, a building in an industrial neighborhood of Huntington Beach. The location is the most recent home of Med-Aid, a group of disabled, sick and terminally ill Orange County residents who collectively smoke cannabis.

Under threats from the DEA and city officials in Anaheim, where Med-Aid operated last year, the collective moved to Sunset Beach until police parked a cruiser in front of the group's storefront, forcing it to move once again. James, a member of Med-Aid, says DEA agents served the group with a notice to close within 14 days or else face criminal prosecution—adding they were specifically looking for her. “I got a call from the collective saying, ‘There are a bunch of feds looking for you,’” James says. “When I got home, there were six DEA agents waiting.”

James, who had been attending a local Democratic Party meeting, wasn't even able to lower herself via her vehicle's wheelchair elevator before the feds surrounded the car and personally served her with a letter threatening to seize the building and to prosecute anyone who continues to operate a collective at the location. Med-Aid agreed to close its doors.

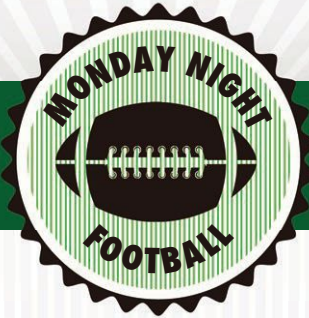

In one email shedding new light on the crackdown, Assistant U.S. Attorney Greg Parham bragged about his office's zeal in eradicating all dispensaries. "My old pal Jay Williams called me again this afternoon," Parham wrote in an Aug. 28, 2012, email. "As you probably recall, Williams is the potential operator for the [marijuana] store that was due to open at the above location [in Anaheim]. Williams told me that he had talked with a couple of lawyers, and they told him that if he followed the letter of the law '110 percent,' then he had nothing to worry about. I told Williams that the lawyers lied to him and completely disregarded federal law. Williams was again advised that we are enforcing federal law in this district and that all stores in our jurisdiction will be shut down."

According to Parham, Williams asked whether he could relocate to either Garden Grove or Santa Ana. "I made it clear that there was not a city in the area that he could safely move to," Parham wrote. "Keep your eyes open for Mr. Williams (if that is his true name). It seems like he is really conflicted about staying in the game."

In a May 28 email, Parham reveals that a landlord, whose surname is Kinney, had authorized eviction of a marijuana collective. "Kinney talked to the tenant today, and he said he felt terrible for all the sick people who were unable to get their medicine," Parham wrote. In a separate email sent to Parham just five minutes earlier, one of Parham's colleagues, Sandra Sagert, expressed glee over the eviction. "Hopefully, we can resolve soon, so we can celebrate! Has been a little over a year since we started. . . [smiley face]"

As of this writing, thanks to Obama's ongoing "Potpocalypse," it's near impossible to find an open dispensary in Orange County, although there are a handful still fighting the good fight. It's not easy, given the feds are even going after landlords—most infamously, Anaheim's Tony Jalali, who stands to lose his $1.5 million investment property because he had rented office space to a dispensary at which an undercover cop purchased a whopping $37 worth of cannabis.

It's especially ironic that Jalali's building is in Anaheim, the city that has for the past several years rolled out the welcome mat for the annual Kush Expo, a celebration of medical and recreational pot-smoking culture, complete with hot chicks.

Apparently, the city and the feds want folks to know that if they're eager to exercise their state-mandated right to toke, they better do it in the Kush Expo's medication area, presumably right before the Kush Girl contest. As these photos reveal, if the Kush Expo can't cure your woes, you're not trying hard enough!

1) Remain silent.

2) Always decline a field sobriety test.

4) Do not lie to the police and say you have not been drinking! If you lie and then the police prove that you have been drinking, through a blood or breath test, it will look very bad for you in court.
